

The Dinosaurs' Last Seashore

"I love coming to this place and time: The Great Western Interior Seaway of North America 67 million years ago. I admire the big pterosaurs that posture and groom themselves on the barrier islands and the long, graceful necks of distant plesiosaurs. Humid mangrove swamps fringe the shore, each tree heavy with hanging vines. Vast rolling plains farther inland host herds of dinosaurs that seem to crawl across an infinite green carpet. The cliffs, dusted with pines and gaudy ferns, turn burnished gold in the evening sunlight." J.

Want to get away from it all?

Take a Cretaceous vacation and visit The Dinosaurs' Last Seashore along the Great Interior Seaway 67 million years ago. A veteran time traveler will lead the way and help tell the story of the creatures that transformed the dinosaurs' world into the one we occupy today. Beautiful black and white interior illustrations plus color covers and timeline enrich the tale.

Enjoy...

- a unique window to an exciting era in the history of Western North America.
- amazing facts about a lost world of fantastic creatures—from the microscopic to the monstrous.
- elegant, scientifically accurate illustrations that beg to be colored.
- solving an ancient mystery with the knowledgeable "J." as guide.

Award-winning author/illustrator Gary Raham's works include The Restless Earth: Fossils (YA nonfiction) and essay, "The Fall of the Nicotine Kid," both finalists in the 2010 Colorado Authors' League book awards. Middle school students have enjoyed the adventures of his young time travelers, Jon and Neesha Olifee, in The Deep Time Diaries for the past decade.

Revel in the warm ocean breeze on a beach far from the dinosaur herds. But swim at your own risk. The waters hold monsters like you've never seen before.
